gold, to which the Hopps refer, Mr. H. Korman, the Statistical Secretary of the Imperial Maritime Customs, in his report on the foreign trade of China for 1923, says that gold has been shipped abroad in large quantities and that during the period 1899-99 China has contributed to the world supply of gold, 25,199,000, equal to $5,385,500, calculated at the average exchange of each year.

But although gold has appreciated, which should mean lower prices for all articles paid for in gold, the various markets have not yet adjusted themselves to the change, and the experience of the foreign resident in the East who draws a fixed income in silver is very different from that of the traveller as described by Mr. HANBURY. "The fortunate traveller landing on these shores," says Mr. HANBURY, "finds his income doubled! If he is an American he is delighted to find that the 'Bank puts him two dollars for every one he puts down on the counter; the Englishman is equally rejoiced to find ten dollars counted out to him instead of the five to the pound sterling he has been used to in the United States. And these dollars the traveller soon finds are just as good for spending, to pay hotels or shops, as they ever were." The permanent resident, however, who has to live on a salary paid in silver, though he may on the whole be able to live as comfortably on his income as he was twenty years ago, feels the pinch of exchange when he has to make remittances home, say for the education of his children or to meet any other charges to which he may be liable, and when he has to buy European stores the increase in the price makes him wince. While the fall in exchange was gradual local prices remained fairly steady, but the rapid changes in the relative values of the precious metals during the last twelve months has left silver prices of European goods for the present very considerably above what they were before.

The Shanghai Commission of the Clontarf reports that an epidemic has broken out there. The symptoms, though not identical with those of the disease now prevailing in Hongkong, were somewhat similar to them, and our contemporary considers it possible that the plague may reach Shanghai eventually, and find there comparatively unopposed.

A correspondent, whose letter is too tedious to print in full, writes that he has been in addition to the black plague, war is troubled with another serious contagious disease named the "exanthematic plague" and that it is more the latter than the former that is driving the population out of the place. If that is so, it is impossible to put a stop to it.
